A Touching Sight -Friday afternoon is now the occasion for pleasant scenes at the Deaf, Damb and Blind Institution. For some time, the design of this Institution seemed unappreciated-many months had passed before a visitor appeared to cast a smile upon the labors of those engaged in teaching these poor children, notwithstanding notices were in all the journals of the District. To one who chanced to stumble upon this lonely dwelling, it seemed gloomy, indeed; there were gathered a few rough, untutored children, but a handful-some with freshly shaven heads, casting up their vacant stare, and portraying too truly their long neglected conditions The traces of soap, and prints of the finger of some kind hand in dislodging the thick layers of filth that had accumulated during their long state of wandering vagrancy, and the fresh lavish of ointment, all spoke in language unmistakeable of reform on the part of these; while on the other hand it was none the less indicative of a task little to be desired. Lonely indeed, did it appear to the eye of the stranger but not so to those who toiled for them night and day with incessant watching and continued self-denial: to them there was a bright and glorious future spread out before the eye of faith.

But the scene is changed. Now, many are seen weekly flocking to witness these delight ful exhibitions Among them are generous hearted men and sympathizing and beautiful ladies, and with the rest the children of our city are seen gathering in large numbers though less in size, yet not least in interest and sympathy for their afflicted fellows. What can be more delightful than to see these children gather here and try to express their affection for these, their deaf, dumb, and b'itd companions Those who were present list Friday were delightfully surprised by one of the most interesting spectacles ever witnessed. Three young school girls came forward and presented Dr Skinner, the principal of the institution, with a beautiful purse well filled with gold and silver, amounting to some eight or ten dollars, which they had collected together at a little fair, at which they charged two cents admission, and where they brought their little toys and offered them for sale, choosing to part with them that they might aid in teaching these their little afflicted fellow beings. In presenting it they simply said they had done this because they loved the little deaf and dumb and blind children. To which Dr. Skinner replied, that he hoped their little gift would bless the hearts of the little givers as well as the little receivers In the name of the children who could not speak for them-selves, he thanked them, and said he hoped they would grow up to bless the world even as they had now blessed these blind children and their silent companions. This was truly an affecting sight, an example well worthy to be followed by children of a larger growth We hope that it will be speedily, and that an abundance will flow into this Institution to bless both givers and receivers.

The reports respecting the hostile Anglo-French demonstration against Naples acquire consistency. It is now confidently stated that if Naples does not agree immediately to the concessions demanded, a fleet of eight vessels has already been detailed for the purpose, and will proceed immediately to Naples and bring men who were discharged at Malta from the British legion, against which Britain protests and demands their immediate release; and, further, that an uneasy state of feeling is prevalent; that England acts in the Neapolitan affair without the hearty concurrence of France. All these rumors have tended to the depression of English funds.
